

Fair Admissions Campaign

Let's open up all state-funded schools to all children, without regard to religion

Are you happy to live in a society in which children are unable to gain admittance to their local state school, because of religious selection?

While parents feel they must game the system in order to get them in?

The Fair Admissions Campaign aims to put an end to this. Schools should be a beacon of fairness, but are mired in discrimination.

Reasons to oppose faith-based selection

- 1. Religious selection amounts to legalised discrimination by the state on the basis of belief or practice.
- 2. Dividing children on the grounds of religion damages community cohesion. Allowing children to grow up with friends from diverse religious backgrounds promotes harmony.
- 3. Religious segregation leads to socio-economic segregation. Religiously selective schools typically admit a much smaller percentage of pupils on free school meals than others in their postcode or local authority.
- 4. Many faith schools choose not to select children by faith and yet are still able to maintain their ethos – proving that selection is not necessary in order to do so.
